Energize, educate and engage your company when Ellen and Jim instill confidence, reignite creativity and open communication channels. Audiences leave equipped to help all levels of your organization work better together to achieve individual, team and company goals.

“YES, AND” The Communication Process of Champions

Life is filled with curveballs. As business professionals, dealing with the unexpected is what we do all of the time, improvising as we go. Through interactive lessons, we stretch your range of behavior options to build your improvising muscles to handle any simple or difficult situation.

Be the Leader You Are Meant to Be

Work out your leadership muscles with World Series Champ, Jim Mecir and corporate manager turned improviser, Ellen Schnur. Benefit the entire organization when you strengthen your capacity to collaborate and innovate, build stronger relationships, and help solve problems more quickly.

Through a series of challenges and stories from the mound, you and your team will experience the same attributes practiced to win baseball and build successful improv teams. Learn simple tools that they actually “try on” and bring back to the workplace.

Did you know that studies show women speak up to 75% less often than men when there are more men than women in the room? From an early age, we are trained to censor ourselves and control our impulses. Often this stops many of us from doing things and from being ourselves when we are uncomfortable. It's time to step out of your comfort zone and into your own power. Take the risk – it's worth it!

You've trained your staff in all of the hard skills of their job; now build on their listening, speaking, power dynamics, client relationships and how to handle objections. Improvisers and athletes need these skills to win games and audiences. Experience how they do it and walk away with more sales muscle!

Every day your customer service team is on the field, getting curve balls thrown at them and throwing pitches they hope will hit their mark. They may have scripts to follow, but the customers don't, which means your reps have to improvise. So why not sharpen their improvisation skills to handle the good, bad and ugly of customer service?

Interactive, Engaging & Impactful Training Programs

Our interactive training programs present new skills for the most important aspects of all levels of an organization. Each inspiring story from the pitcher's mound translates directly to a business lesson and is then practiced through interactive group improvisation activities.

Our Growing Client List

Our Clients Say . . .

"With Ellen and Jim, it was the most exciting and engaging program we have put on so far in 10 years through this organization. For me, the big thing was understanding and really listening while working with your staff and customers, how do you get them interested and engaged in the conversation? Let them share ideas by using the "Yes&" principles is really where the success is going to come from." Brian, New Jersey

"Ellen Schnur led a workshop for a leadership team where I work. It is still being talked about months later! And co-workers who were afraid going in came out wanting to do it again. It was fun, created a sense of team, and brought people out of their shells!"

Jen Ciolino, Dow Corning

"I felt so empowered from Ellen's workshop. I look at it as a benchmark in my life, and now, it won't be so hard to get up in front of people!"

Cat Wallace, Engineer

"At one of my #TEDxIIT events, Ellen Schnur did a fabulous job warming up the audience both pre-show and during the break. They could not have enough of Ellen. Her workshops will change your outlook."

Amy Segami, Business Owner

Top 10 Reasons to Learn Through Improv

10. Disrupt your usual way of thinking in a safe and supportive environment.
9. Experience overcoming adversity and building your resilience (some call it grit!).
8. Sharing the spotlight creates new leaders and engaged employees.
7. Reframe failure as a gift – an opportunity.
6. Learn to leverage the skills that an actor uses on stage to keep their audience engaged and engrossed.
5. See how creating psychological safety brings teams together.
4. Practice listening at a deeper level, even when you have a LOT on your mind.
3. Experience the power of “Yes, And” – building buy-in and fostering innovation and creativity.
2. Sharpen your “emotional intelligence” skills (managing your own emotions and being able to more accurately read others).
1. Experience how improvisers create on the spot, in front of an audience.

Best of all, you will have fun, laugh a lot and bring the lessons back to your workplace and help create a more constructive, adaptable and collaborative environment.

Take Your Organization to Diamond Level.
